Key Takeaways

Fiber optic cable fittings, including connectors and adapters, are available from both U. S. and Chinese manufacturers, with prices influenced by type, brand, fiber count, and order volume. Manufacturers and SuppliersU.

S.-based manufacturers include companies like Bisco Industries, Custom Cable Corp., Field Components, and Convergent Connectivity Technology, offering fiber optic cables, connectors, and patch panels for commercial, industrial, and military applications. These suppliers provide services ranging from prototype to high-volume production, with options for JIT delivery and vendor-managed inventory. Chinese manufacturers such as Wolontek provide factory-direct pricing for FTTH drop cables, ADSS, and outdoor cables.

They offer bulk pricing based on fiber count, fiber brand (premium brands like Corning or YOFC cost more), and cable type. Factory-direct purchases typically reduce costs by eliminating distributor markups and shipping overhead.

Made-in-

China also lists multiple fiber optic fitting suppliers, allowing buyers to request quotations and compare prices.

Types of Fiber Optic Fittings

Connectors: LC, SC, ST, MPO, MT-RJ, MU, FC, and others, available in single-mode or multimode configurations.

Adapters/

Couplers: Used to join two fiber connectors, available in simplex or duplex formats. Patch Panels: For organizing multiple fiber connections in data centers or telecom installations.

Pricing Considerations

Fiber Count: Higher-core cables (e.g., 48, 96, 144 cores) may have a lower per-fiber cost due to manufacturing efficiencies. Fiber Brand: Premium fibers (Corning, YOFC) are more expensive but offer lower attenuation and longer lifespan. Generic fibers are 10–15% cheaper but may have higher bending loss.

Quantity: Bulk orders reduce unit cost; distributors may offer tiered pricing. Shipping Terms: FOB (factory) vs.

CI

F (including freight) affects total cost. Tariffs may apply for imports to the U. S., ranging from 8% to 38% depending on product type.

Connector Type: Simplex connectors are generally cheaper than MPO or multi-fiber connectors. Specialty connectors for military or medical applications may cost significantly more.

Example Price Ranges

Standard LC/SC connectors: Typically $1–$5 per unit for bulk orders from distributors. MPO/MTP connectors: $10–$30 per unit depending on fiber count and brand. Patch cords (1–5 meters): $5–$20 for single-mode, $3–$15 for multimode, depending on quality and manufacturer.

Bulk outdoor cables: Prices vary widely; a 24-core ADSS cable may cost $1–$3 per meter from Chinese factories, while premium U. S. suppliers may charge $3–$6 per meter.

Recommendations

For cost efficiency, consider sourcing directly from Chinese manufacturers like Wolontek or using Made-in-China to request multiple quotes. For high-reliability applications (medical, military, or data centers), U. S. suppliers like Bisco Industries or Custom Cable Corp. provide certified products with AS9100 or CSA compliance.

Always verify fiber brand, connector type, and shipping terms to ensure pricing comparisons are accurate. By evaluating these factors, buyers can balance cost, quality, and delivery requirements when purchasing fiber optic cable fittings.
